
MINOR CIVIL DIVISIONS.

TABLE 5.—POPULATION OF STATES AND TERRITORIES BY MINOR CIVIL DIVISIONS:
1890 AND 1900.

EXPLANATIONS REGARDING THE MINOR CIVIL DIVISIONS USED BY THE CENSUS.

The states and territories in the United States are composed of counties (called parishes in Louisiana) and a small number of cities which are independent of counties. The cities of Baltimore, Md., and St. Louis, Mo., are each wholly independent of the adjacent county of the same name. In the state of Virginia, 18 cities are independent of the counties in which they are geographically situated.

The principal divisions into which counties are subdivided for governmental purposes are collectively termed "minor civil divisions." These differ in their powers and functions in different states, and, in some cases, in different parts of a state, and also differ greatly in area. They are known in different states as townships, judicial townships, towns, hundreds, beats (or supervisors' districts), commissioners' precincts, election precincts, justices' precincts, civil districts, election districts, magisterial districts, militia districts, police jury wards, plantations, locations, purchases, grants, gores, and surpluses. Besides these principal divisions of the counties there are municipal corporations known as cities, towns, villages, and boroughs, each of which, in certain cases, embraces one or more of the above named minor civil divisions, or forms a part of one or more of them for all purposes of government or for sanitary and police purposes, while some of them are wholly independent of minor civil divisions and constitute principal divisions of counties.

In the states organized from the public domain and surveyed under the national land system, it has been the practice, to a great extent, to take the congressional township, 36 miles square, as a basis of town or township organization.

The counties in the several states and territories differ materially in their relation, on the one hand, to the state or territory; on the other, to the various civil divisions into which they are subdivided.

The conditions of the counties and minor civil divisions are constantly changing as new counties are created or as consolidations take place.

The compact bodies of population that receive special authority for organizing as chartered cities, towns, villages, or boroughs increase in number every year with the growth of communities, requiring special provisions for police and sanitary regulations.

In New England, and in a portion of the country strongly affected by New England migration, the town has many of the powers which, in the south and in the newly settled west, pertain to the county. To a great extent, the citizens of a chartered municipality within such town continue to participate in town government and are subject to town regulations, while in some states the city is more or less independent of the town or township, as previously stated.

The usual subdivision of the city is the ward, a geographical division for representative, executive, or magisterial purposes, but without any legislative functions, except such as are shared by other wards in the city council or board of aldermen.

A fuller explanation than this of the municipal relations of the civil divisions of the states and territories would be beyond the limits of the present purpose, which is to make clear what units were utilized for census purposes in the several states and territories, and for what units population has been separately returned by the census enumerators, as set forth in the following summary:

ALABAMA.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them. Mobile city is independent of the election precincts and forms a principal division of the county.

ALASKA.—No counties or civil divisions exist. The population is given for certain cities, villages, and settlements, although they are not incorporated.

ARIZONA.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities and towns form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

ARKANSAS.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the townships in which they are located.

CALIFORNIA.—The counties are divided into judicial townships, and are so returned, except Contra Costa county, which is returned by supervisors' districts. Cities and towns form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with them. Sacramento city is independent of the judicial townships and forms a principal division of the county. San Francisco city is coextensive with San Francisco county.

COLORADO.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

CONNECTICUT.—The counties are divided into towns. Cities and boroughs form parts of the towns in which they are located, the city, in several instances, being coextensive with the town. The borough of Naugatuck is also coextensive with the town of the same name.

DELAWARE.—The counties are divided into hundreds. Cities and towns form parts of the hundreds in which they are located. Wilmington city is coextensive with Wilmington hundred.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—The county and municipal organizations were abandoned in 1874, and the cities of Washington and Georgetown and the county of Washington thereupon ceased to exist.

FLORIDA.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

GEORGIA.—The counties are divided into militia districts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the militia districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

HAWAII.—There is no county organization, but the islands, with two exceptions, are divided into districts. Honolulu city (so-called) is coextensive with the district of Honolulu, but is not incorporated.

IDAHO.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the election precincts, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

ILLINOIS.—Of the 102 counties in the state, 83 are divided into townships and 19 are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the townships or election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

INDIANA.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the townships in which they are located.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—There is no county organization, but the territory is divided into nations and reservations. Under the provision of an act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, a number of towns have been incorporated.

IOWA.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities and towns form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with them, except Sioux City, which is independent of township organization.

KANSAS.—The county subdivisions are townships. Cities of the first and second classes are independent of the townships and form principal divisions of the counties. Cities of the third class, having a population of 1,000 or over and an assessed valuation of not less than $150,000, may, upon a two-thirds vote, become independent of the townships. In other cities of the third class, those corresponding to incorporated villages in most states, the people participate in the government of the townships in which they are located.

KENTUCKY.—The counties are divided into magisterial districts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the magisterial districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

LOUISIANA.—The parishes, similar to counties in other states, are divided into police jury wards. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the police jury wards in which they are located, or are coextensive with them. New Orleans city is coextensive with Orleans parish.

MAINE.—The usual divisions of the county are towns and cities, the latter being, in effect, merely towns under a different form of government. Besides these, there are plantations, gores, grants, surpluses, and townships, which, as a rule, are sparsely settled. The form of government granted to plantations is very simple, giving to the organization but little power, while gores, grants, surpluses, and townships, as a rule, are unincorporated, being simply tracts of land laid off by the state authorities. Several villages have been incorporated under a recent act of the legislature, forming parts of the towns in which they are severally located.

MARYLAND.—The counties are divided into election districts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the election districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with them. The city of Baltimore is independent of Baltimore county.

MASSACHUSETTS.—The counties are divided into towns and cities, the cities differing from the towns only in the character of their government.

MICHIGAN.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities are independent of the townships and form principal divisions of the counties, while the villages form parts of the townships in which they are located.

MINNESOTA.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities and boroughs, and villages, with few exceptions, are independent of the townships and form principal divisions of the counties. Certain other villages form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with them.

MISSISSIPPI.—The counties are divided into beats or supervisors' districts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the beats in which they are located, or are coextensive with them. Many of the larger beats are divided into two or more election precincts.

MISSOURI.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with them. The city of St. Louis is independent of St. Louis county.

MONTANA.—The counties are divided into townships, which are subdivided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

NEBRASKA.—The counties are divided into either townships or election precincts. A number of cities are independent of the townships and election precincts and form principal divisions of the counties, while other cities and all the towns and villages form parts of the townships or election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with them.

NEVADA.—The counties are divided into either townships or election precincts. There are but three incorporated places in the state: Virginia City, which is independent of township government and forms a principal division of the county; and Carson City and Reno town, each of which forms a part of the township or precinct in which it is located.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The usual divisions of the county are towns and cities, the latter being, in effect, merely towns under a different form of government. Besides these, there are locations, grants, purchases, and townships, which, as a rule, are unorganized, being simply tracts of land laid off by the state authorities.

NEW JERSEY.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities, towns, villages, and boroughs, with few exceptions, are independent of the townships and form principal divisions of the counties.

NEW MEXICO.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities and towns form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

NEW YORK.—The counties are divided into towns and cities. Cities and villages are incorporated, the former being independent of the towns from which they are taken, while the latter remain in the towns and form component parts of them, or are coextensive with them. The 5 boroughs of New York city are, Brooklyn, coextensive with Kings county; Manhattan and Bronx, coextensive with New York county; Queens, coextensive with Queens county; and Richmond, coextensive with Richmond county.

NORTH CAROLINA.—The counties are divided into so-called townships. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with them.

NORTH DAKOTA.—The counties are divided into either civil townships or school townships. The cities and most of the towns and villages are independent of the townships, and form principal divisions of the counties, while certain other towns and villages form parts of the townships in which they are located. Many of the counties have no minor civil divisions and are returned by congressional townships.

OHIO.—The counties are divided into townships. A few cities are independent of the townships and form principal divisions of the counties, while certain other cities and all towns, villages, and hamlets form parts of the townships in which they are located, or are coextensive with them.

OKLAHOMA.—The counties are divided into townships and election precincts. Cities and towns are independent of the townships and election precincts and form principal divisions of the counties.

OREGON.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages, with the exception of a few cities which are independent, form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

PENNSYLVANIA.—The counties are divided into townships, cities, and boroughs. Philadelphia city is coextensive with Philadelphia county.

RHODE ISLAND.—The counties are divided into towns and cities, the cities differing from the towns only in the character of their government.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—The counties are divided into townships. Cities, towns, and villages, with the exception of the city of Charleston, which is independent, form parts of the townships in which they are located.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The counties are divided into civil townships, school townships, school districts, and election precincts. Many of the cities, towns, and villages are independent of the townships and form principal divisions of the counties, while others form parts of the townships and precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with them. A number of the counties have no minor civil divisions, and are returned by congressional townships.

TENNESSEE.—The counties are divided into civil districts. Cities and towns form parts of the civil districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

TEXAS.—The organized counties are each divided into four commissioners' precincts, which are subdivided into a certain number of justices' precincts. The population of the organized counties has been returned by justices' precincts, with the exception of Bowie county, which is given by commissioners' precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the commissioners' precincts or justices' precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with the justices' precincts.

UTAH.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities and towns, with the exception of a few cities which are independent, form parts of the precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with them.

VERMONT.—The usual divisions of the county are towns and cities, the cities differing from the towns in the character of their government. There are also a few unorganized subdivisions, known as townships, gores, and grants. Under the laws of Vermont, villages are incorporated, and form parts of the towns in which they are located.

VIRGINIA.—The counties are divided into magisterial districts. Towns and villages form parts of the magisterial districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with them; but the cities, 18 in number, maintain municipal organizations independent of counties.

WASHINGTON.—The counties are divided into election precincts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the election precincts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

WEST VIRGINIA.—The counties are divided into magisterial districts. Cities, towns, and villages form parts of the magisterial districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with one or more of them.

WISCONSIN.—The counties are divided into towns. Most of the cities and villages are independent of the towns and form principal divisions of the counties, while certain other cities and villages form parts of the towns in which they are located.

WYOMING.—The counties are divided into election districts and each election district may comprise several voting precincts. Cities and towns form parts of the election districts in which they are located, or are coextensive with them.

In the annexed table, giving the population of states and territories by minor civil divisions, the principal divisions of the county (townships, towns, election precincts, etc.) are set out to the marginal line, while the secondary subdivisions, or those which form parts of the principal divisions, are indented one space. In certain instances, where secondary subdivisions only are shown, the principal divisions not having been separately returned by the enumerators, such secondary subdivisions are also set out to the marginal line.
