We all admit the power of co-operation. Each community in order to get the best out of both its town and country must first have the proper community co-operation. Without this we can not properly succeed and in time discord arises. Notwithstanding our knowledge of this condition, it is often hard to secure co-operation in the small towns of the state, and in many instances this tie that binds, that links town and country together, is lacking entirely.

Still every thinking person knows that the country needs the town and likewise the town needs the support of the surrounding country and where you find each assisting the other, co-operating in the things for the advancement of the community, you are sure to find a thriving and up-to-date business center and a happy and prosperous farming community.

But in order to get this community co-operation we must understand the full meaning of the term. First we all concede that each man separately stands for his own individual force; but if a number of men join together and put their undivided efforts toward promoting some move for the betterment of the community as a whole, it is an assured fact that this combined force will have more weight and produce better results than a larger number of one-man moves. True co-operation means giving up one's own preferences and considering the public good as better than one's own. The man who forgets himself is the most successful in working with other people.

The Community Days which are being arranged in various towns throughout the state are put on for the express purpose of promoting a closer relationship between the people of the town and the people of the country. The interests of both are the same.

On Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 26 and 27, the second community event will be held. In order to make these events a credit to this community we must all enter into the move with the proper community spirit. Let us give the plan as outlined a fair, honest trial. The Times hopes the people from the surrounding community will join in the move. Attend the programs and hear what the lecturers have to say. If you don't like the plan, tell those in charge so and suggest where it can be improved, and when the time comes for the organization of the Binford Community Club, come and assist in the organization. We believe it is a move in the right direction.
