The performance of the play, "What Happened to Jones?" presented by the McHenry Dramatic club, played to a full house at the opera house last Friday evening, and those who were present declared it to be one of the best plays ever presented here. The play was directed by Rev. Trigg, who also took a prominent part in the production. All who participated in the affair are deserving of great credit for the excellent manner in which they acquitted themselves. The specialties between the acts were also well received. There was not a dull moment in the entire program and each act and number brought forth hearty applause. Should the McHenry aggregation put on another play at any future time they will receive a hearty welcome and a good patronage at Binford.
