Postmaster Knapp wants to make as fine a showing in the sale of government saving securities during the remainder of 1920, as he possibly can. He has set himself to the task of selling daily at least one $5 saving stamp to a person who has not been buying regularly and in addition he is determined to sell some of the $100 Treasury Savings Certificates and possibly a few of $1,000 Treasury Savings Certificates.

The postmaster also wishes to remind teachers and pupils that he hopes to make December the banner month for the purchase of the 25c thrift stamp.

Report of the sale of these savings securities will go to the Government Savings Organization headquarters immediately following the end of the month.
