

Dr. Almklov, Superintendent of the County Board of Health, received a letter from the Secretary of the State Board of Health, calling attention to the compulsory vaccination law. The law as enforced last year remains as it was. All children before entering school should present a certificate of vaccination. Those who have had smallpox need no certificate. It is best to comply with the law and have the children vaccinated at once, so that their arms may be O. K. when school starts.
