Binford residents had a chance to smell the smoke of the big Minnesota forest fires this week. The northwest wind prevailing thru Monday night brought the smoke this way, so that the air was heavy with the odor of burning pine. The sun appeared as a red ball due to the smoky atmosphere, and while the smoke was not dense enough to cause any inconvenience to the people, they could imagine what it must be where the fires are only a few miles away. It has been several years since smoke from forest fires has been noticeable here.
