

"Shock or Knit." That is the slogan on the lips of every man in at least a dozen cities of the state at this time, and there are not very many men knitting. The men whose business prevents them from going into the fields in the day time form automobile parties in the evening and get in from three to four hour's work every night with splendid results. Thousands of acres of grain are shocked nightly by the volunteers who can only go out for the evening. In many instances the farmer is asked to pay the same amount of money which it would have taken to shock his grain to the Red Cross, so the volunteers are performing a doubly patriotic service.
