Class I of the 1917 registrants is nearly depleted and it is expected that the first call in September will take all that are left. In the special

Cure These Slackers.

Three wealthy farmers in Stafford county, Ill., told their neighbors who were soliciting for the Red Cross that they made their own money and could do as they pleased with it. They gave the solicitors to understand that they were entirely independent of the rest of the people. The farmers in the neighborhood held a meeting. Some of the most hot-headed ones proposed the use of tar. But one said: "We'll take them at their word and have nothing to do with them." Everyone present signed an agreement to cut off all relations with the three. Then they took the paper to town and had the merchants sign it. The next day one of the three farmers drove into town in his car to buy some supplies. "I can't sell you anything," said the merchant. He went to the bank and the banker said, "I don't want any of your business" He went to the garage to get some gasoline. "I can't let you have it," said the proprietor. He then went to the telephone exchange to telephone home for gasoline. "You haven't any telephone," said the manager. "You are cut off."
