

Milton Grigsby has taken possession of the pool hall which he purchased from Iver Alfstad, and has had the interior nicely fixed up for business. He will keep the pool tables in operation, and is also serving hot coffee and lunches. He solicits the patronage of the public.