

Hannaford Enterprise: On Thursday evening the second youngest child of Otto Hagan was severely burned. The little boy who is about three years old, had been put to bed up-stairs by his mother. After she left he began playing with matches and ignited his flannelette night-gown. Hearing him cry, his mother sent one of the little girls up to see what was the matter. She called for her mother but by that time the child was all ablaze. She succeeded in putting out the flames, but his chest and the lower part of his body were severely burned. Medical aid was called at once, but his condition is serious.
