H. H. Helland will be laid up for a few days as a result of figuring in a runaway Tuesday. While hauling his household goods from the train to his home west of town, he stopped by a spring to get a drink of water. While so engaged, the horses started to run away. In trying to stop the team, they knocked him down so that two wheels of the wagon passed over his left hip and leg, bruising him up considerably. His face was also scratched some, but aside from feeling sore and stiff, Mr. Helland luckily escaped any serious injury.
