Pekin Budget: Robert Mueller's team of horses caused quite a little excitement here Wednesday of this week. Mr. Mueller had just unloaded a load of grain at the North-western elevator when the team got away and started for the railroad crossing east of town. There they met an automobile on the grade north of the railroad track, and having a little sense left, they took the ditch, and passing the auto, they started for the road toward the Sheyenne river, again crossing the track by Matt Quam's. Martin Fredrickson had by this time got his Ford cranked up and with Mr. Mueller was hot on the trail. They caught up with the runaways about miles out of town, passed them and attempted to head them off but the now panic stricken team saw neither car nor men, but headed straight for the steep bluff this side of the Sheyenne river, and down they went and finally going head over heels into a tangled mass of horses and wagon. Miraculously the horses were unhurt and nothing broken either of the harness or wagon.
