

here. While at the aviation field he spied a large flock of geese flying over and he decided to give chase with his aeroplane. A friend had an automatic shotgun handy which he offered to the aviator. One local nimrod standing by all armed volunteered his services and climbed into the front seat of the plane. The aviator took his accustomed rear seat and they were off on the aerial goose chase. After a long race the geese were headed off from their southern course and several times the aeroplane was in very close range of the geese. The aviators shot repeatedly it is said but they failed to drop any of the geese.

Somehow the chase was noticed by Deputy Game Warden Grulke, a farmer residing a few miles southwest of Wimbledon. He came to town after the aeroplane had landed and arrested Aviator Roberts on the specific charge of shooting wild game from a moving vehicle. The defendant pleaded guilty and was fined $30.
