

The American Legion Post and Auxiliary are making preparations to celebrate Armistice Day, Saturday, November 11th. The committees have planned to give a fitting program in the hall, free to everybody, then sell a coffee and cake lunch, after which the library and reading room will be formally opened to the public. The ladies of the Auxiliary have worked hard to gather a collection of good books for this library and have decided that on Armistice Day would be an appropriate time to celebrate the opening. Those who have promised to donate books are kindly asked to bring them in for cataloging before that day. The program and other details will be published in The Times next week.
