

Postmaster Peterson announces that the postoffice will be open evenings up to nine o'clock all this week to accommodate those who find it difficult to mail their parcels except between train time. This is done in order that the Christmas mail may be dispatched to the best advantage. Parcels that are mailed early can be sent in direct pouches, requiring least handling before it reaches its destination. Patrons who desire may also call for their mail during the evening hours.

If it hadn't been for the Oregon Trail's exploration the Northwest wouldn't be the country it is today. It might not even be under the American flag, and the world would be poorer by eight or ten billion dollars or so. Telling history on the screen is always interesting if romance is in the tale. It is in this case, for the Oregon Trail presents in itself one of the most vital tales of history, and you will miss much if you don't take in the picture at the Lyric Theatre Saturday afternoon or evening. No admission.

---