

C. E. Peterson returned last Friday from Fargo, where he was given some instructions relative to the conduct of the postoffice. Among the many things in which the newly appointed postmasters are instructed in are: how to meet the public; the postmaster's place in the community; how to educate the public, through publicity, in the use of the mails; how to handle complaints; how to guard the mails; and the postmasters' relationship with the post office department. It is the purpose of the Postmaster General, by this innova-
