

SCHOOL PLAY MAKES HIT

The Junior class of the Binford school put on a very creditable performance of the play, "Nothing But the Truth," last Friday evening, to a packed house.

If you never had to tell the whole unadulterated, absolute truth for 24 hours while your best friends and business associates fired personal—very personal—questions at you—well, you probably haven't ever had to, but you can see the possibilities. So did James Montgomery when he wrote "Nothing But the Truth" the three-act comedy. This presentation ranks easily as the best amateur performance ever given in Binford.

It is true that an amateur organization with any talent at all could make the show enjoyable, for its lines are funny, its situations are even funnier and the plot itself is a riot. In the hands of the Juniors it fared well.

Briefly, the plot centers around Robert Bennett (Harold Bakke) who declines to sell some worthless stock for his fellow broker, E. M. Ralston (Elias Halling). In the argument that follows, Ralston claims "business lies" are necessary; Bob says they are not, and Bob bets $10,000 which his fiancée, Ralston's daugh-
