

ter, has given him to invest for a church charity. The bet is that Bob can tell the whole truth and "nothing but the truth" for 24 hours. Dick Connelly, (Irvin Sharpe) a partner of Bob's, and Clarence Van Dusen (Cecil Pinkerton) take part of Bob's bet and the trio make things as hard as possible for the temporary George Washington. Bob struggles through the 24-hour period, but nearly loses his job, his girl and his friends, comes near to starting a divorce suit, "bulling" the market a divorce suit, "bulling" the market counters.

Blanche Greenland as Mrs Ralston made a fine elderly lady, while Nellie Pritz, as her daughter, Gwen, fiancée of Bob's, did her best as "the sweet young thing" Evelyn Alfson, as Ethel Clark, handled her role in good style, while Edna Lewis and Helen Alm as the Jackson sisters, vamps de luxe, were a scream Robert Truscott handled a spasmodicly difficult role as Bishop Doran. Myrtle Hanstad made a capable servant.

During the intermissions a drill and a reading were given, to relieve the monotony while the "hand-changed scenes. Eight little maids from the primary room, dressed in gowns of pink and green, took part in the drill, which received hearty applause. Miss Myrtle Hanstad gave a reading in Irish dialect in a very creditable manner.
