Hannaford Enterprise: What came very near being a tragedy terminated rather fortunately Thursday noon when the N. P. passenger train, ran into and pushed Omu: Ashland's Ford into the ditch. The accident happened at the crossing near the Mercantile store. Mr. Ashland, who was alone in his car, had his attention distracted by something and failed to notice the approaching train until it was too late to avoid a collision. Luckily the train had just started up, and had not gained very great speed, and instead of throwing the car over, it was pushed along the track a few feet and then backed off into the ditch, with Mr. Ashland still at the steering wheel. The car sustained a couple broken wheels, and dented doors and fenders, but Mr. Ashland was unhurt. So the accident ended fortunately for all concerned considering the possibilities for fatalities in a collision of that kind.
