

Bill Lemke, home-builder Bill, was in Binford Monday morning and addressed a large crowd at the opera house. It was the usual harangue of "big biz." He did make mention of his Fargo mansion built by the state, but omitted all mention of that section of that law which prohibits a house being built in town to exceed $5,000. Also, he said he didn't violate that other section, which prohibits state officials from entering into contracts for homes for themselves. He told his hearers that he wasn't attorney general at that time, which is true, but he "forgot" to mention that he was appointed assistant attorney general by Gov. Frazier, and consequently was a state official. He also mentioned that $19,000 sack deal at the Drake mill, and stated that they were all used up except one size, leaving his hearers in doubt as to how many sizes they used, and the quantity of the size that had not yet been exhausted. It might be $18,000 worth so far as any enlightenment from Bill was concerned. He's a good campaigner, but aside from
