

matter and take action.

Burglars attempted Monday night to break into the State Bank of Revere, apparently with but poor success. They succeeded in gaining entrance into the building and in blowing the outer door of the safe, but the first explosion so jammed the inner door of the safe that they were unable to get it open. Evidently they feared the noise of the explosion would attract the attention of people sleeping in neighboring houses, so they did not take time to try to force open the jammed inner door. The loss will be considerable to the bank, even though the bandits failed to secure any valuables, as the safe is wrecked and considerable damage was done to the building. It is not believed that the robbers secured any currency or valuable papers, but the loss cannot be accurately ascertained until the safe is opened. The desperadoes made their escape without leaving any clue to trace them by.
