

mor and thoroughly enjoyed.

A peculiar accident happened in Valley City last week. A farmer had been to town and bought a new sickle for his binder. It was lying in his car and extended four or five feet out of the car. While driving along the street the end struck a pedestrian on the throat, cutting a deep gash, but luckily failing to inflict a serious wound. The practice of carrying an article of that kind sticking out of the side of the car is a mighty poor one as the driver is apt to forget just how far the article extends from the side of the car.

An exchange gives this definition