

Martin Burk was in town Tuesday to take out the first load of lumber for that big barn he is to build in the near future. He had a big bill for someone to figure on, and decided that if he could not get the material at the right price here at home he would get it elsewhere. Well, we can not blame anyone for that, but there is satisfaction in the fact that he gets his lumber just as reasonable in Binford as he could get it elsewhere, and the beauty of the deal is that he has the chance to see what he is getting. Binford has two of the best lumber yards in the country, and they should be patronized. In this particular instance the Gull River Lumber Co. furnishes the material for this building, and Mr. Burk says he is glad that he did not have to go farther than Binford to find what he wanted, and at the price he wished to pay. Now, here is an example of what the business men of our town will do for all who give them the chance. Bring in your bill and let them figure with you. Binford is the haven of refuge for those who want good material at the right price. Remember this, for it is true. All that puzzles Martin now is that he is at a standstill to know whether to ask President Roosevelt to lay the corner stone, or to confer that honor upon W. J. Bryan. He has left it with the Times editor to settle, and that gent is now considering the matter. The chances are that Bryan will be the man for the president is pretty busy just at present, and it will be rather inconvenient for him to get out here at this time. Still we would like to have that big barn on a good foundation.
