Gus Rothert, after suffering for some time from a bad attack of rheumatism, went to Hunter's Hot Springs Montana, about three weeks ago to take the baths in the hope that he might find relief. Being unable to get relief he returned home on Monday of this week and he now has under consideration several other health resorts among which he expects to try, one. He says that he saw some very bad cases cured at Hunter's Hot Springs, and firmly believes it is a good place for people to seek a cure, but his case he regards as an exception and does not lay blame to the treatment for its failure to relieve him. His many friends hope he will soon find a cure for his trouble.
