

The Times office has undergone a very noticeable change the past week. The partition between the two rooms has been removed and the walls repapered, making the office look more like a parlor than a printing establishment, and we're going to try to keep it that way. Our visitors are warned not to spit on the floor—or walls either—remember the Johnstown flood—and smoking is also prohibited—remember the Iroquois fire. We will sweep once a week whether it needs it or not. So there.
