

That Binford is getting to be the best marketing center of any town around here is becoming more and more apparent as time flies. For the month of October Agent West of the N. P., informs us that Binford is a close second in the list of towns on the branch in the matter of grain shipments and that we were held up on account of a lack of cars. There are many reasons for this, chiefly, because the roads leading to town are always in excellent condition, affording the farmers an opportunity to haul larger loads, and there is a good market for their grain and other products, and last, as a trading point Binford can compete with any of them. "All roads lead to Binford" is a mighty good slogan.
