

George, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Vogen, had a narrow escape from what might have been a serious accident. Mr. Vogen was having some coal delivered at his house, and the little fellow happened to be in the way when the wagon was backed up to be unloaded. The heel of his shoe was caught under the wheel. Aside from a very bad fright he suffered no injuries, but it was a close call.