

The Times has been asked to warn the automobile drivers of the fallacy of speeding their cars through the streets. There has been altogether too much of this done in Binford, and we can't see any reason for it. The speed maniac should remember there is a law against this, and while we have no particular desire to see any of them "pulled" for speeding, still, if they insist on doing it, one arrest may serve as a lesson to the others. In nearly all of the cases we find the city man doing the speeding, and just why they can't observe the law as well as the farmers is more than we can see. It is true, that no serious accidents have happened yet but you can't tell when they will—so cut it out.
