

loving are ready with new fuel. Did you ever think how damnably mean some goody-good people are in this respect?

The Commercial club held a meeting last night and various matters of importance came up for discussion, chief of which was the proposition of a Farmers institute and that of electric lights. It was decided to hold an institute here sometime during the winter, the exact date of which cannot be set until the institute workers have made their schedule, but it is thought that two days the last part of February will be arranged for Binford. The two institute days last winter were very cold and disagreeable, but in spite of that there was a good sized attendance, and the farmers got a lot of valuable information, some of which has been put to actual practice. The electric light proposition is still an interesting subject, but the members believe in going about this matter rather slowly and get as much information as possible from some of the other towns around that have electric light and in that way profit by their experience. The proposition is a big one and it concerns every resident and The Times believes that the Commercial club is pursuing the right course in proceeding with this matter in a careful business-like manner. Electric lights are bound to come, sooner or later, but it is best to wait to get at the cost as near as possible and then proceed. A committee was appointed to get the sentiment of the people and to see how many would use the "juice" were a plant installed. Ole Bakken and August Evers were appointed on this committee and they will be to see you in regards to this in a short time.
