

A test was made of the chemical engines of the fire department last Saturday, and with the exception of the receptacle for acid in one of the engines, was found to be in perfect condition. The acid had corroded the receptacle so it was practically worthless, and a new one has been sent for.