

Someone with only a modicum of brains drove a threshing rig over the cement crossing north of the Lewis residence in South Binford, and as a result the cement was broken. Owners of threshing rigs should have more consideration than to attempt to drive over the crossings without first planking them. The village authorities have spent a lot of money making improvements, and while they are willing to stand for anything within reason, they most emphatically object to the total disregard for the property of the village as was the case in this instance. There was absolutely no excuse for it, and the man certainly knew that the crossings would not hold up under the strain of such heavy traffic.
