

$100 for a Dog.

The following account of a dog shooting is taken from the Sanborn Enterprise, and will be read with interest here because of the fact that the person who did the shooting is well known here, having been employed in Shaw's restaurant about a year ago:

When Frank Berry shot and killed the dog which seemed viciously intent on attacking himself and his companion, Vern Boughten, on the night of October 30, he little realized that he was depleting the ranks of dogdom aristocracy in Barnes county—else he would have stayed his hand.

The two young men were passing the home of C. G. Thompson on Section 2-138-60, proceeding slowly because of darkness, when the dog attacked them. They say the dog tried repeatedly to jump into their car in its efforts to get at them, and finally shooting became necessary. The result was that they were sued for $100, the alleged value of the dog, by Mr. Thompson, the owner.

At the hearing before Judge Smith in Valley City Monday, Thompson set forth that the dog was a thoroughbred Scotch collie worth $100 of any man's money, and notoriously gentle and peaceful. And he convinced the judge who awarded judgment in the sum of $100 against Berry, who had assumed all responsibility for the shooting.
