

A Narrow Escape.

Ole K. Dahle came near losing an arm late Friday afternoon while at work about the machinery in his shop. It was while he was up on a ladder oiling some bearings, and in reaching over a shaft the coupling caught his sleeve and started to wind things up in short order, but Ole broke the grip that the shaft had on his clothes and managed to save himself from a serious injury. As it was he pulled thru with a slightly injured arm but with very few clothes left upon his person, for his vest, outer shirt and undersuit were practically torn from his body.—McVille Journal.