

It seems that it takes more than one crop shortage to discourage our farmers, judging by the number of new barns that are going up. Alek Osmundson is building a large barn on his farm, Engebret Iverson is building a barn, Hokin Smogaard is laying a foundation for a large new barn on his place, John P. Vangen is making improvements on his buildings and Ole Danielson is about ready to have a barn erected on his farm. All this, in a bad year, speaks well for the prosperity of our farmers.
