

Master Wallace, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Peterson, met with a very painful accident on Tuesday, while he and his mother were visiting at the Ehlers home south of town. In playing about the house, he fell headlong into the cellar striking his forehead on the step, inflicting an ugly wound. It is about three inches long and torn open, revealing the skull. The wound is such that it is likely to leave a mark for the rest of his life.
