Lars Ore, a farm hand, employed by Matt Rorvig, became insane last Friday. During the day he came to town to consult Dr. Truscott, claiming that he was afflicted with every ailment known, but a diagnosis of his case revealed symptoms of insanity. The doctor gave him some medicine and he went home. That night, however, he refused to go to bed and sat up all night. Next day Sheriff Monson came up and took the demented man to Cooperstown before the insanity board. As he was a native of Minnesota he was taken back to that state and committed to an asylum for treatment.
