

Sherman Payton, who teaches the Hemerlin school, received a bad cut over the left eye, which necessitated several stiches. He, in company with Francis Ringlee and Misses Marie Norman and Cora Paul were on their way to spend Sunday with the Hemerlins, and when about half way to their destination the rig tipped over, Mr. Payton striking his head against the corner of a two-by-four. The rig being an enclosed one, the occupants had to crawl out through the front. The ladies walked the rest of the way to Hemerlins, and the men came back to town to have the wound dressed.
