A little scare was given the residents of Binford last Thursday afternoon, when the fire alarm was sounded. A valve on a gasoline stove at W. G. Tweed's residence had been left open, allowing the gasoline to flow out, and when Mrs. Tweed, who was going to use the stove, touched a match to the burner the flames shot up to the ceiling. She immediately gave the alarm and in a few minutes the fire boys were on job, but before they could reach there, Tweed had the flames out with an extinguisher which was close at hand.
