

Found Dead in Bed

Ole Severson, an unmarried laboring man, making his home at Aneta, was found dead in his room at that place this morning.

Severson had not been seen in his customary haunts since last Saturday, but nothing unusual was suspected until this morning when the proprietor of the building noticed the presence of a putrid smell which was traced to the man's room. The door was forced and the body was found in a terrible condition, death having evidently occurred three or four days ago.

No evidence of violence was found and it is probable that death came as a result of too much bad whiskey. Severson was a heavy drinker.
