

The new schoolhouse had a close call from being destroyed by fire last Friday. The plumbers had left a big bunch of felt pipe covering on top of the boiler at the end where it gets the hottest, and it became ignited and burst into flames and was going good when discovered by E. E. Walker the boss carpenter, who promptly put out the fire. Had it not been discovered at that time we might possibly still be without a school building. Moral: Keep the building well insured.
