

Emil Sollin, with the Gold Medal Pharmacy, met with a peculiar accident last Saturday, which came near causing the loss of his right ear. In stooping to pick up a nail he hit the handle of a hand ax which was lying upon one of the shelves, causing it in some unknown manner to strike him on the ear and cutting that member so badly that it was necessary for the doctor to take eight or ten stitches in dressing the wound. It is healing quite rapidly now and Mr. S. is thanking his lucky stars that he still has that most useful appendage left.
