The Courier comes out this week with a new name. It will be known hereafter as the Cooperstown Courier, the old original name of the paper. The name Griggs Courier was given the paper by the late F. H. Adams, whose idea was to keep the name of the county before the people. We believe in keeping the town before the people. When the Sentinel was started by its promoters the name Griggs Sentinel—copying after the Courier to a large extent in name and make-up, a compliment we appreciate—was given to it. This sameness in name has resulted in the two papers getting mixed by the state press to a more or less extent. We have had a chunk of populist doctrine credited to the Courier, while the Sentinel has been credited with boldly advocating republican principles. Neither of the papers want to stand for that so that the proprietor of this paper has decided to make the charge which we hope will be better all around.
