

Joel Jameson took an unintentional bath the other day that was on the chilly order and came near scaring him to death if nothing else. He was working up at A. H. Berg's house and was standing on the cistern cover when a board broke and Joel dropped into the cistern. He yelled bloody murder and fire but was pulled out before the fire department could get around to him to turn on the hose. Outside of a good wetting down and a good scare no further damage was done.