He has more papers than he can read.
 He has no time to read except nights and his eyes are so poor that he can't see them.
 He can't afford to take all of them, so he takes none.
 He doesn't think much of your paper anyhow. "It never has no news nor nuthin' else much."
 He can get a city weekly four times as big as yours for the same price and "its got lots of readin' in it too."
 He doesn't like the politics of the paper.
 His neighbor takes it and he takes the other one and they "kinder change off, you know."
 He get mad at the editor seven or eight years ago and wouldn't take the paper if it were the last one on earth.

Here is a Cure, Indeed.

The oddest cure for nervous prostration is that advocated by Sebastian Kneipp, a Bavarian priest. It is to walk barefoot and bareheaded in wet grass on wet stones in fresh fallen snow or in cold water. Kneipp has been in practice, he says, thirty years with this curative method. He is said to have cured thousands of patients by it. His little village is overcrowded with visitors coming for help in their various ailments. People of all classes seem to have faith in the man, and even Baron Nathaniel Rothschild (taking with him a cook, a secretary and two servants), has gone through the necessary ordeal, sleeping in his own private saloon carriage at night meanwhile at a railway station four miles off. Kneipp claims that water will cure every curable disease.
