

Spent Night In Snow Drift

C. J. O'Brien, of Colgate, called on the Pioneer Tuesday and in the course of conversation related how he, together with his ten year old daughter spent the night in a snow drift on the prairie. Mr. O'Brien and the little girl left Colgate for their home 7 miles west of that place one day during the latter part of December and wandering from the road became lost. He unhitched his team and dug a hole in the snow and turned the sleigh box on the side, which afforded a shelter from the storm and he and the little one spent the night on the dreary prairie in one of the worst blizzards of the season. It was indeed a sleepless night for the mother and dear ones at home and a night long to be remembered by Mr. O'Brien and his little daughter. Mr. O'Brien says that one cannot realize the situation unless he has actually experienced it.
