The following clipping from a Spokane paper will be of interest to our readers:

With half a dozen intimate friends the only guests, Miss Lottie Jameson and Arthur Weart were married at the home of Miss Jameson's parents, S301 Farrell street. The ceremony was simple and quiet in the extreme, the Rev. Henry A. Sheldon of the Union Park Methodist church, reading the services. Lina Jameson, a sister of the bride, was bridesmaid and Fred Devore was groomsman.

Mr. Weart is authorized as a special policeman to protect his bride from the attentions of Gillis S. Sapp, a former fiance, who is now in the city jail as a result of his persistent following Miss Jameson about. Since Sapp's and Miss Jameson's engagement was broken off last February, the young man has been arrested three times, and by his ceaseless attentions has driven his former sweetheart to the verge of nervous collapse.

Miss Jameson was attired last night in a simple white frock, and wore a rose in her hair. Mr. Weart wore a gray business suit. The bride was given away by her father, Joel Jameson.

"We want the late unpleasantness to be forgotten," said Mr. Weart after the wedding. "Lottie and I will make our home in the city, I don't know just yet where, and the worries she has had can't be forgotten too soon."
