

—A few months ago the Courier had occasion to speak of Meadow Brook Farm, the model plantation of Dakota, and a stroll we had over the place a few days since prompts further reference to it. We have always maintained that there is nothing in the line of farm or garden products but that will thrive amazingly on Griggs county soil, and in Jack N. Brown's garden we find a firm "clincher" for this assertion. Mr. Brown's "patch" covers two acres of ground, and notwithstanding this has been a dry season we there found growing in abundance peas, beans, radishes, lettuce, beets, turnips, ruta bagas, squash, pumpkins, cucumbers, melons, cabbage, green corn, salsify, and several kinds of "truck" we can't pronounce. Let one look upon that garden, with its almost complete, thrifty representation of the vegetable kingdom and he must admit that the resources of our soil are as numerous as they are inexhaustable, and all one has to do is to put seed in the ground, then stand aside and let a fountain of food spring up at his feet.
