

A good sized business deal was made last Saturday when Geo. Adams sold his dray line business and good will to F. G. Killeran & Son, who assumed charge of the business Monday morning of this week and have transferred all the property and stock to their barn on Lenham avenue. Their office will now be at the livery barn where all orders for dray work can be received over the phone or in person. The Killerans are good business men and will run the business on business lines. They will aim to give the public good service and have a team handy all the time. The Courier wishes the new firm success. George Adams has not fully decided upon his future movements at this time.
