

The Baptist church was crowded to its utmost capacity last Sunday evening by those who wanted to hear the Baccalaureate sermon preached for the benefit of the graduating class of 1910. Rev. J. M. Jenson, pastor of the Lutheran church, was the speaker and he delivered a very thoughtful sermon in which he pointed out that while it was necessary to have a good education it was still of greater importance to have a Christian education to better fit each one for the life to come after we shall have closed our labors here on earth.
