

Rev. J. G., Dingle cannot be accused of being lazy. Last year he remodeled the parsonage and did most of the work himself and now has a comfortable home for the pastor to live in. Now he is engaged in filling up the church lots and leveling them off, making another good improvement. In between licks he is figuring on painting the parsonage and wielding the paint brush himself; then on Sundays he rests up by preaching three sermons—good ones too. The Methodist people of this city are fortunate in having a pastor who is not afraid to buckle down and help the cause along by some hard work.
